The students were put into groups and had to come up with their own definition of uniqueness as well as questions relating to gualities that make an individual unique. The students then met in circles in the Cafetorium with their  $7^{\text{th}}$  and  $8^{\text{th}}$  grade peers and led the discussion about the information that they researched and questions that they formulated. The next day, all of the middle school students came together again and wrote one fact about themselves on a strip of paper that they believe makes them unique. The final task was to link all of the papers together to show that although they are each unique in their own special way, they still come together as one in their school and community. The 6th grade class did an excellent job leading their fellow middle school peers and enjoyed having a leadership role. Great job 6th grade, keep working hard!
